Report on Columbia Hits NASA

Bottom line, not safety took priority with management

WASHINGTON | NASA's overconfident management and inattention to safety were as much a cause of the Columbia accident as the chunk of foam that struck the shuttle with deadly force, investigators concluded Tuesday. Without drastic changes, they said, another disaster is likely.

In a scathing 248-page report coming almost seven months to the day after the spacecraft disintegrated over Texas, the Columbia Accident Investigation Board said the shuttle was not "inherently unsafe," but issued a series of recommendations for a safe return to flight.

O'Keefe

"The board strongly believes that if these persistent, systemic flaws are not resolved, the scene is set for another accident," the investigators wrote.

The board said the space agency lacks "effective checks and balances, does not have an independent safety program and has not demonstrated the characteristics of a learning organization."

Board member John Barry put it this way: "NASA had conflicting goals of cost, schedule and safety. Unfortunately, safety lost out."

NASA Administrator Sean O'Keefe pledged to make the necessary changes. "We are, all of us at NASA, a part of the solution." MARCIA DUNN (AP)

Anthrax Expert Sues Ashcroft

WASHINGTON | The bioterrorism expert under scrutiny in the 2001 anthrax attacks sued Attorney General John Ashcroft and other government officials Tuesday, accusing them of using him as a scapegoat for their failure to make an arrest in the case.

Dr. Steven J. Hatfill said Ashcroft and other federal authorities destroyed his reputation and ruined his job prospects by labeling him a "person of interest" in the case, cir-

Hatfill wants his name cleared and seeks unspecified damages from Ashcroft, the Justice Department, the FBI and other current and former FBI and Justice officials.

Federal officials have said Hatfill is not a suspect and that they have no evidence directly linking him to the October 2001 anthrax attacks. SAM HANANEL (AP)

The Sweet Smell of the Office

Officials in Murfreesboro, Tenn., say one smelly employee is responsible for a new policy that requires all city workers to smell nice while on the job. "No employee shall have an odor generally offensive to others when reporting to work," the city council said in a policy adopted Thursday — an order that includes smelly perfumes or colognes. The definition of body odor was left intentionally vague, but, Councilman Toby Gilley said, "We'll know it when we smell it." (AP)

U.S. Faces Years Of Budget Deficits

Analysts warn outlook will grow more dire if spending increases

WASHINGTON | The federal government is in store for at least eight more years of budget deficits, including a record $480 billion shortfall in 2004, congressional budget analysts said Tuesday.

The Congressional Budget Office warned the numbers will become more dire if the White House gets its way on tax cuts and Congress fails to rein in spending.

They said the budget outlook "has worsened substantially" since its last review in March, when it put next year's deficit at $200 billion.

Much of that is the result of subsequent acts of Congress to cut taxes and increase spending for defense and the war in Iraq, it said.

The CBO, a nonpartisan group, said the budget will edge back into the black in 2012 and 2013, but will record an accumulated deficit of almost $1.4 trillion in the 2004-2013 period. In March, it predicted a surplus of $891 billion in that period.

Democrats seized on the report as proof that the Bush administration policy of cutting taxes while demanding more for defense and homeland security was threatening the nation's economic viability.

The White House and GOP leaders, however, argued the deficit was manageable, only a small percentage of the national economy, and that they could reduce it by strengthening the economy and holding down spending. JIM ABRAMS (AP)

Academy to Punish Cadets for Drinking Incident

AIR FORCE ACADEMY, COLO. | The entire cadet corps will get a dressing down because of a weekend underage drinking incident that embarrassed an Air Force Academy still struggling to overcome a sexual assault scandal, the new superintendent said Tuesday.

All 4,000 students at the academy outside Colorado Springs will be lectured Thursday about the consequences to their military careers and to the institution, Lt. Gen. John W. Rosa said.

Seven 20- and 21-year-old cadets were caught in a hotel room off-campus early Saturday with two young women, 16 and 18 years old. All were ticketed by police.

Rosa said any cadet found to have supplied alcohol to a minor would most likely be expelled from the academy under a the academy's zero-tolerance drinking policy that is part of the "agenda of change" ordered by the Air Force. (AP)

Texas Session Ends Without Decision

Democrats who stalled redistricting measure remain in New Mexico

AUSTIN, TEXAS | The Texas legislature adjourned its second 30-day special legislative session Tuesday without passing a congressional redistricting bill, as 11 Senate Democrats blocked consideration of the measure by maintaining their self-imposed exile in New Mexico.

The Democrats have said the current map should not be changed, and that proposals before the GOP-dominated legislature this year would have hurt minority representation.

Republicans, led by U.S. House Majority Leader Tom DeLay, have said recent voting trends show Texas should have more Republicans representing the state in Washington.

Democrats have a 17-15 majority in the Texas delegation now.

Republican Gov. Rick Perry has indicated he would call another special session to make yet another try to get approval for new congressional boundaries. But he has not said when it would start.

Efforts to address redistricting have failed three times this year. NATALIE GOTTL (AP)

Sniper's Behavior Could Yield Clues

W.Va. officials ask residents to watch for suspicious activity

CHARLESTON, W.VA. | The task force investigating three deadly sniper shootings at Charleston-area convenience stores asked the public Tuesday to watch for people who have shown an intense interest in the probe, taken a sudden vacation or altered their appearance.

A list of such behavioral changes was attached to a previously released composite sketch of a heavyset white man with a goatee seen near the last two shootings.

"Hopefully it might stir their memory that they might remember seeing someone that had some of these traits right after the shooting," said Police Chief Jerry Pauley. "It's just some things to look for that may occur like one or two days after the shootings."

Jeanie Patton, 31, and Okey Meadows Jr., 26, were killed Aug. 14 about 90 minutes apart at convenience stores outside Charleston. Four days earlier, Gary Carrier Jr., 44, was killed while talking on the telephone outside a Charleston convenience store.

The man depicted in the police sketch was spotted by witnesses near the last two shootings, behind the wheel of a dark Ford F150 pickup truck.

Investigators continued to comb through more than 1,000 leads on Tuesday. MICHELLE SAXTON (AP)

Dallas Police Chief Fired Amid Scandal

Cop's lawyer alleges race played a role in the city's decision

DALLAS | Police Chief Terrell Bolton was fired Tuesday, ending a four-year tenure marked by the nation's worst big-city crime rate and a scandal over fake drugs allegedly planted on suspects.

City Manager Ted Benavides said he fired Bolton, effective immediately, because "after four years I just thought it was time to go in a new direction." He said there was no one cause, but "an accumulation of issues."

Bolton's attorney, Bob Hinton, described the firing as a personality conflict between Bolton and Mayor Laura Miller, adding he didn't think Bolton would have been let go "if the chief had not been African-American." He would not elaborate.

Bolton said he didn't know why he had been let go, adding, "I think I've given Dallas everything that I could give Dallas within the resources that I had."

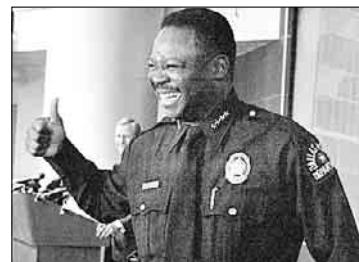

Miller, who is white, said the firing was Benavides's decision, not hers, but she supported it and

Hawaii Transit Strike Snarls Daily Commutes

HONOLULU | The public transportation system for Honolulu and the rest of Oahu came to a halt early Tuesday when the union representing 1,300 bus workers went on strike, stranding tens of thousands of commuters on Hawaii's most populous island.

Representatives of the workers and Oahu Transit Services, Inc. negotiated behind closed doors for more than nine hours Monday but failed to reach an agreement.

Transit workers are seeking higher wages and benefits, demands that the company says it is unable to grant since the bus system faces a budget shortfall of $6.8 million. (AP)

Some 9/11 Families Dread Release of Phone Transcripts

NEWARK, N.J. | Leila Negron, whose husband was killed at the World Trade Center, dreads hearing the details of phone calls made from the twin towers that day.

"For me and my children, it's like being slapped in the face with it happening again," said Negron, 36, whose husband, Peter, worked as an environmental specialist.

The impending release of the transcripts of the calls is evoking a range of responses from victims' families less than three weeks before the second anniversary of the Sept. 11 attack that killed 2,792 people.

A state judge ruled Friday that the transcripts must be released by the close of business Thursday, rejecting a bid by the Port Authority, which owned the trade center, to back out of an agreement it made with The New York Times in July.

Dorothy McLaughlin, whose 36-year-old son George died in the attack, acknowledged the transcripts could be disturbing, "but by the other token, I know that a lot of families would like to hear." (AP)

U.S. Rounds Up Bandits in Iraq

24 suspects captured in huge operation; key figure eludes troops

KHALIS, IRAQ | U.S. forces launched Operation Ivy Needle Tuesday in a series of raids with hundreds, perhaps thousands, of soldiers searching out bandits, gangsters and Saddam Hussein loyalists. At least 24 suspects were captured.

Operation Ivy Needle swept up the 24 suspected criminals and Saddam loyalists near Baqouba, 42 miles north of Baghdad. Hundreds of troops, backed by helicopters, tanks and Bradley fighting vehicles chased a convicted murderer and gangster named Lateef Hamed al Kubaishat — known as Lateef by U.S. forces, said U.S. Col. David Hogg. Lateef was imprisoned and serving multiple life sentences for murder until Saddam granted amnesty to all prisoners last year.

Lateef escaped capture, but the military said it caught seven men it was specifically looking for and seized arms. A later raid on the home of a gunrunner netted three men after troops surrounded the house. The three suspects tried to flee, with one firing a heavy machine gun. He was wounded in the leg. No U.S. soldiers were reported killed or injured.

The death toll of American troops killed in postwar Iraq surpassed the number killed in major combat, reaching 140 with the death of a soldier in a roadside bombing and a second in a separate traffic accident.

U.S. soldiers from the 4th Infantry Division search an Iraqi family's home Tuesday during a raid on scores of houses in Khalis, a town 42 miles north of Baghdad.

When President George W. Bush declared an end to major combat on May 1, the death toll of Americans stood at 138. Counting the deaths that have occurred since, a total of 278 soldiers have been killed since the Iraq war began on March 20.

IAEA Finds Uranium at Iran Plant

VIENNA, AUSTRIA | U.N. inspectors found traces of highly enriched, weapons-grade uranium at an Iranian nuclear facility, a report by the U.N. nuclear agency says. Iran said Tuesday the traces came with equipment purchased abroad decades ago.

Agency inspectors found "particles" of highly enriched uranium that could be used in a weapons program at the facility at Natanz, said the report prepared for a meeting of the U.N. agency's board Sept. 8 in Vienna. Contents of the report were made known to The Associated Press by diplomats who requested anonymity.

The United States has accused Iran of developing a clandestine nuclear weapons program, violating the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty barring the spread of atomic weapons.

Iran has denied the allegations, insisting its programs are devoted only to generating electricity.

Rebel, Army Troops Clash in Liberia

Liberian capital calmed despite fighting in interior

MONROVIA, LIBERIA | Liberia's army claimed rebels had overrun two towns in a new push apparently aimed at clearing government forces from the north, and aid workers and civilians reported panicked streams of refugees in flight Tuesday from the alleged advance.

The reported offensive, which comes despite a week-old peace deal meant to end 14 years of conflict in the country, would put the rebels within 65 miles of the capital from the north.

Rather than reopening any siege on Monrovia, it appeared insurgents might be trying to rout government forces from the north, securing territory ahead of an African peace force's deployment to the interior.

While Monrovia has calmed since West African-led forces deployed in the capital nearly four weeks ago, skirmishes have persisted in the country's center, north and southeast. Liberia's interior remains largely a no-go zone for West African peacekeepers and aid groups alike.

Humanitarian workers returning to Monrovia from an early venture into the unsecured north reported large movements of people from the direction of the two towns.

'No Evidence' Saudis Fighting in Iraq

WASHINGTON | The Saudi government challenged the Bush administration Tuesday to prove its claims that Saudi citizens have traveled to Iraq to fight American troops and said U.S. forces have failed to secure their side of the border.

"We have no evidence of Saudis crossing into Iraq and we have received no evidence from the U.S. government," Saudi foreign policy adviser Adel al-Jubeir said in an interview with The Associated Press.

Al-Jubeir was reacting to comments by Bush administration officials over the last few days suggesting some foreign fighters have crossed from Saudi Arabia to help fight the American occupation in Iraq through sabotage and attacks on soldiers. (AP)

Hamas Militants Targeted Again

No let-up in Israel's campaign against Palestinian group

GAZA CITY, GAZA STRIP | Israel accelerated its deadly campaign against militants Tuesday, killing a water-pipe vendor in a botched missile strike against Hamas gunmen in the Gaza Strip that also wounded 26 bystanders. Three Hamas members managed to flee their car in a crowded Gaza City street before the missiles hit, witnesses said.

Israel has killed seven militants in two missile raids in Gaza and stepped up military operations in the West Bank since 21 people died in a Hamas suicide bombing on a Jerusalem bus last week. Hours before the Gaza Strike, Israeli soldiers dressed as Arabs snatched two wounded militants, one involved in a suicide bombing, from their beds in a West Bank hospital.

NATO Troops Step Up Search for U.N. Fugitive

PALE, BOSNIA-HERZEGOVINA | NATO troops in Bosnia on Tuesday gathered outside the home of Radovan Karadzic's daughter, who is suspected of helping the top U.N. war crimes fugitive elude justice.

There were no signs the operation was an attempt to arrest Karadzic himself, who reportedly has been hiding in remote eastern Bosnia. U.S., French and Italian peacekeepers began gathering at about 10 a.m. around the home of Sonja Karadzic in Pale, Karadzic's wartime headquarters 10 miles northeast of Sarajevo. Others patrolled the town. They were not seen entering any buildings.

Karadzic

NATO-led peacekeepers have conducted numerous raids and other operations in recent months aimed at tightening the noose around Karadzic.

Karadzic was indicted in 1995 for genocide and crimes against humanity committed against Bosnia's non-Serb population. Both have been in hiding. The most infamous atrocity in the U.N. indictment against Karadzic is the July 1995 massacre at Srebrenica, a U.N. "safe haven" for Muslim refugees. RADUL RADOVANOVIC (AP)

Furious downpour
shuts down Beltway;
thousands lose power

WASHINGTON | A Severe thunderstorm created rush hour havoc Tuesday, bringing down trees and power lines and closing the Capital Beltway in both directions. Thousands were left without power and commuter trains were delayed.

The Maryland State Highway Administration said power lines were down on both the inner and outer loops of the Beltway in Greenbelt. State police said the lines electrified guardrails and other parts of the highway infrastructure.

In the District and Maryland, the storm cut power to about 79,000 Pepco customers, most of them in Montgomery County. Dominion Virginia Power said at least 50,000 customers were left in the dark, mostly in Alexandria and Herndon.

A Montgomery fire and rescue spokesman said at least 12 buildings were struck by lightning.

Trees fell across the tracks on MARC's Brunswick line in the Gaithersburg-Germantown area, causing delays of up to an hour for trains on that line.

Service wasn't delayed on Metro, but eight stations lost power and operated on backup resources, spokeswoman Cheryl Johnson said, limiting light and leaving fare gates, escalators and most elevators inoperable.

The Beltway reopened around 6 p.m., Prince George's County Fire and Rescue officials said, and no one was injured. (AP)

John Allen Muhammad shakes hands with defense attorney Peter Greenspun during Tuesday's hearing. The defense was granted access to witnesses' name.

Muhammad's Lawyers Win Witness Name Battle

MANASSAS, VA. | Prosecutors will likely be required to provide defense lawyers the names of witnesses who identified sniper suspect John Allen Muhammad out of a photo lineup, a judge ruled Tuesday.

The witnesses cannot directly link Muhammad to the Oct. 9 shooting of Dean Harold Meyers outside a Manassas-area gas station, but are expected to testify about Muhammad's general whereabouts during the three-week sniper spree in October.

Before Tuesday's hearing, prosecutors had only turned over information about two witnesses who could not identify Muhammad out of a photo lineup.

Judge LeRoy F. Millette Jr. ordered prosecutors to provide defense lawyers with details about the procedures used in the photo lineup. If defense lawyers still have questions about the procedures, prosecutors must give the defense lawyers the witnesses' names.

Also Tuesday, Millette ruled prosecutors must provide exculpatory information contained in 23 pages of police interviews of people who knew Muhammad when he lived in Washington state.

D.C., Counties Announce School Emergency Pact

WASHINGTON | The District and schools in seven area counties have agreed to coordinate their responses to regional emergencies, the Metropolitan Washington Council of Governments said Tuesday.

The agreement covers nearly 884,000 public school students in the district, as well as Arlington, Fairfax, Loudoun and Prince William counties in Virginia and Maryland's Montgomery, Prince George's and Frederick counties. It also includes students from about 150 Catholic schools in Virginia's Arlington Diocese and the Archdiocese of Washington.

Details aren't final, but the plan could coordinate dismissals and procedures during a crisis, said Calvin Smith, COG's director of human services. (AP)

Va. Adds EZ Pass To Speed Travel

RICHMOND, VA. | Virginia is joining the EZ Pass automatic highway tolling system used in nine East Coast states, allowing users of Virginia's dominant Smart Tag system to breeze right through toll booths all the way up to Maine.

The plan is expected to go into effect by fall '04 and cost up to $4.5 million, said Gov. Mark R. Warner (D), announcing the deal Tuesday on WTOP radio. (AP)

Amazon Sues E-Mail Marketers Over Name Use

SEATTLE | Amazon.com Inc. has filed federal lawsuits against 11 e-mail marketers, contending they faked their e-mail addresses to appear as if the messages were sent by Amazon.com, the company said Tuesday.

The suits, filed Monday and Tuesday in several U.S. district courts and in the Ontario Superior Court of Justice in Canada, seek injunctions to stop the alleged e-mail forgeries as well as millions of dollars in punitive damages.

The lawsuits are part of an effort by Amazon.com to stop e-mail "spoofing" of its name, the company said. Amazon.com, Internet auction site eBay Inc. and others have long been targets of e-mail forgery. (AP)

Vivendi Cuts Field to NBC, Bronfman Group

French conglomerate still exploring public offering of Universal

PARIS | Vivendi Universal on Tuesday narrowed the field of bidders for its entertainment assets to two — General Electric Co.'s NBC and an investor group led by former Seagram Co. chief executive Edgar Bronfman Jr.

In either case, a deal would leave the French media and utilities conglomerate a "substantial minority interest" in a U.S. media company, the company said in a statement.

The assets for sale include Vivendi's cable channels, USA, Sci-Fi and Trio; the Universal movie and TV studios; and several theme parks.

In its statement, Vivendi also said it was still exploring a public offering for Vivendi Universal Entertainment.

Vivendi has been hoping to sell the Hollywood assets for at least $14 billion to pay down debt.

NBC wants to merge Vivendi's entertainment assets with its own holdings, including the CNBC and MSNBC cable channels and Telemundo, a Spanish-language broadcaster.

Bronfman is leading a group of investors that include Thomas H. Lee Partners, a private equity fund, and Cablevision Systems Corp., a New York-based cable TV company that owns three cable channels including AMC. JAMEY KEATEN (AP)

Another Tackle Added

Redskins trade for Dalton, who then overheats in practice

PRO FOOTBALL | Defensive tackle Lional Dalton was traded from the Denver Broncos to the Washington Redskins on Tuesday, then had to be carted off the field with heat-related symptoms on a sauna-like day during his first practice with his new team.

Dalton was not hospitalized, and the team hopes he can play in Thursday night's exhibition game at Jacksonville.

He had not practiced in two weeks because the Broncos wanted to keep him healthy while they shopped him for a trade.

"I don't guess he was ready for this heat," Redskins coach Steve Spurrier said.

Dalton was acquired for a fifth-round draft pick, although it will drop to a seventh-round selection if he plays less than 40 percent of the defensive snaps. JOSEPH WHITE (AP)

Drummond Pulls Out of the Worlds

TRACK | American sprinter Jon Drummond pulled out of the World Track Championships on Tuesday rather than being kicked out.

Drummond, who refused to leave the track after being disqualified from Sunday's 100-meter quarterfinals for a false start, announced his decision as world track officials threatened to expel him from the championships for "bringing the sport into disrepute."

The International Association of Athletics Federations had given USA Track & Field a deadline of Tuesday night to take disciplinary action against Drummond.

An hour before the deadline expired, the USATF said there were

Terps Have High Hopes for Season

COLLEGE FOOTBALL | When Ralph Friedgen launched his first season as the Terrapins' head coach two years ago, Maryland had not been to a bowl game in 10 years and had five consecutive losing seasons.

Now, after appearing in two straight bowl games, the Terrapins enter the 2003 season with lofty expectations.

Ranked 15th in the preseason AP poll, Maryland returns 17 starters from a squad that capped an 11-3 season with a 30-3 rout of Tennessee in the Peach Bowl.

Among those coming back is senior Scott McBrien, the first returning starting quarterback during Friedgen's brief tenure.

REPRESENTING THE U.S.

Head coach April Heinrichs on Tuesday chose the roster for this year's American women's World Cup team. Among the selections are:

- Mia Hamm, the leading scoring in women's international soccer with 140 goals.
- Brandi Chastain, who scored the winning penalty kick in the last World Cup.
- Briana Scurry, the goalkeeper who made the critical save in the penalty kick portion of the 1999 championship.
- Abby Wambach, the Washington Freedom player who scored both goals in the Founders Cup and was named the most valuable player.

Jon Drummond lay down on the track Sunday to protest a false start ruling.

no procedures under its bylaws to carry out an investigation in such a short period.

Drummond, who had hoped to run in the 400-meter relay this weekend, issued a statement confirming he was pulling out of the meet and the rest of the 2003 season. STEPHEN WILSON (AP)

McBrien hands off in a scrimmage.

The return of McBrien means Maryland can survive without running back Bruce Perry, who severely sprained an ankle during preseason drills and will miss the Terrapins' first few games, beginning with Thursday's opener at Northern Illinois.

The defense will miss two-time Atlantic Coast Conference defensive player of the year E.J. Henderson, but Leon Joe and D'Qwell Jackson should do well in his place at linebacker. The secondary gets all four starters back.

Although this appears to be the best Maryland team since Friedgen's arrival, the rest of the ACC has improved. The toughest games appear to be Florida State (Sept. 6) and North Carolina State (Nov. 22). DAVID GINSBURG (AP)

Lester Bangs's 'gonzo criticism' lives on in new anthology

BOOKS | It's almost perverse to say, but the past few years have been good to Lester Bangs.

True, he died in 1982. But between the portrayal of Bangs as a cynical sage in the 2000 film "Almost Famous" and Jim DeRogatis's biography, "Let It Blurt," the man hailed as America's greatest rock critic is experiencing a cultural resurgence.

Now Bangs's work can speak for itself, thanks to "Mainlines, Blood Feasts and Bad Taste: A Lester Bangs Reader."

The anthology celebrates Bangs as the foremost practitioner of a form of gonzo criticism that has mostly died out. Anyone these days who asked the sorts of impudent interview questions Bangs asked would have trouble getting publicists to return his calls.

Editor John Morthland's choices show Bangs in all his scruffy glory, gleefully tearing into the Beatles for pomposity, championing acts like Anne Murray and exploring his antagonistic relationship with Lou Reed, whom Bangs idolized and frequently needed.

"He has succeeded in taking a hissing Muzak whiz," Bangs wrote in his review of Reed's "Metal Machine Music." "Perhaps I should also mention that I like this record."

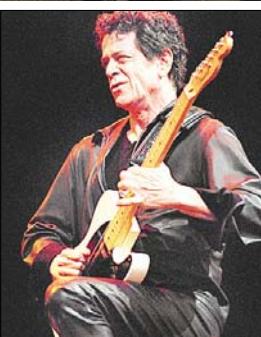

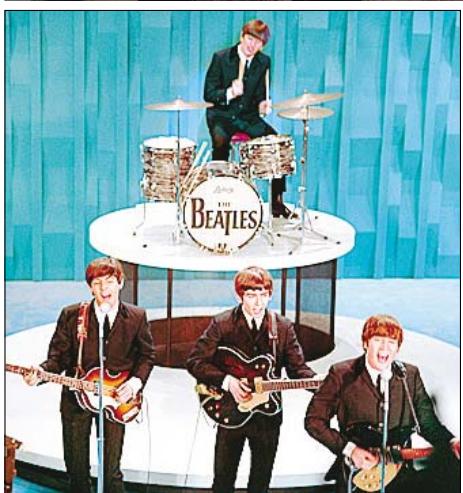

Bangs was a passionate and knowledgeable music fan; he scorned hollow style and the artifice of empty coolness. His craving for musical honesty colors "The Blood Feast of Reddy Kilowatt!," which poked fun at Emerson, Lake & Palmer for the prog-rock trio's sonic excess.

"If there's an energy crisis, these guys amount to war criminals," Bangs wrote after describing equipment that took roadies five hours to set up and another five to break down.

His pieces make no attempt at objectivity. There's no critical detachment; he openly telegraphed his joy or disappointment with an album or musician based on his own taste and standards of artistic integrity.

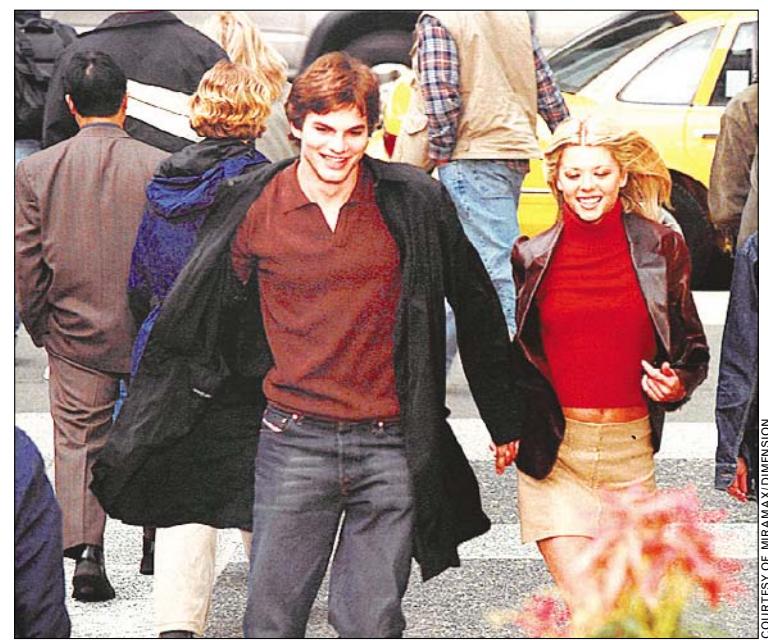

It's a potentially divisive way to write, but it's incredibly honest. Even at his most infuriating, and Bangs by all accounts could be infuriating, his writing illuminates an aesthetic soul and a bleeding heart.

Ashton Kutcher picks on someone his own age — Tara Reid as the forbidden fruit.

The Eternal Triangle

FILM | Ashton Kutcher's newly high exposure makes it odd that Dimension Films did not preview "My Boss's Daughter" for critics.

The truth is, it's not awful; it's a genial youth comedy that serves Kutcher well as a vehicle.

As Tom Stansfield, a lowly researcher at a publishing company, Kutcher becomes smitten with the daughter of the firm's head, Jack Taylor, played with cold, steely calm by Terence Stamp.

Jack's daughter, Lisa (Tara Reid), also works for the company and she, like Tom, finds her artistic impulses stifled.

A series of misunderstandings leads to Tom housesitting for the Taylors. His main charge is caring for Jack's prize owl, O.J.

"Like the murderer?" asks Tom. "No, like the football player," replies Jack. (This is the first of many jokes on a gag that expired in 1995.)

Inevitably, O.J. gets loose; Tom must attempt to pull everything back together before Jack returns, which, obviously, will happen earlier than it was supposed to.

It's too early to tell whether Kutcher is the Rob Lowe or the Andrew McCarthy of his generation. He hasn't proved he can act, but he's yet to show he can't.

Jazz on Wry: Steely Dan at Nissan

4 Donald Fagen and Walter Becker were postmodern before postmodernism had a name. The dark-humored jazzoid pop of Steely Dan has been breaking though to the mainstream intermittently for decades, which says something good about America. Now, as Becker said on NPR, "We're on the irony float."

Gershon Takes It Off

RESEARCH | Actress Gina Gershon opted to learn the art of stripping in popular New York adult establishment Scores — the venue in which Demi Moore trained for "Striptease."

The sexy brunette, who portrays a singer who frequents raunchy clubs in her upcoming film, "Prey for Rock & Roll," spent many nights in the strip club to further her education of exotic dance.

In the movie, Gershon fronts girl group Clamdandy and performs a series of naked dances for the cameras.

The screen star is no stranger to stripping on the set — her steamy lesbian scene with Jennifer Tilly in "Bound" and her topless-parading abilities in "Showgirls" have cemented her standing as one of cinema's most uninhibited actresses. (WENN)

Bach and the Bad Boys

Filmmakers favor classical music for homicidal atmosphere

FILM STUDIES | When the strains of classical music break into a movie, the music often plays the same role that a glass of chardonnay might on a first date: as a suggestion, however mild, of civilization, of "classiness." A sighing string instrument can connote genteel romantic love, like gauze covering the camera.

In Merchant Ivory films, classical music represents a kind of well-upholstered high culture, piping through the soundtrack as Bentleys roll past deep green lawns to country homes.

But Kristi Brown, a musicologist at the Colburn School of the Performing Arts in Los Angeles, says the music of J.S. Bach often works differently. These days, when you hear Bach in a film, he tends to accompany serial killers, Nazis and mad scientists.

One of an emerging group of scholars who study classical music's resonance in pop culture, Brown is looking at how movies borrow Bach's music for scenes of stabbings, flayings and falling bombs.

What intrigues her is the peek the movies offer into the contemporary American unconscious, into the way mass culture understands, or misunderstands, high culture. The pop associations, she says, are an important part of the music's meaning, even if the composer never intended his music to work this way.

"I became interested in the films that were violent and that had a certain kind of protagonist," says Brown, 39. These protagonists, she says, tend toward geniuses driven mad by technology and rationalism, or exemplars of a decadent European culture who've had the morality burned out of them — from Benson, the crazed computer scientist in "The Terminal Man" (1974), to the erudite and malevolent Hannibal Lecter of "The Silence of the Lambs" (1991) and "Hannibal" (2001). Both men gruesomely kill, she points out, while playing the same piece, the 25th of Bach's "Goldberg Variations."

Other homicidal Bach lovers include the brilliant, shape-shifting title character in "The Talented Mr. Ripley" (1999), who plays jazz to impress friends but favors "The Italian Concerto" when alone; the Nazis in "Schindler's List" (1993), who pause to play a Bach piano suite on their way to ransack a Jewish ghetto; and the brainy, technologically savvy serial killer in "Kiss the Girls" (1997), who gives a victim menacing advice on how to play Bach on the violin.

By all reports, Johann Sebastian Bach (1685-1750) was a good Lutheran who spent most of his life in a linden-lined Saxon town, playing organ, singing children and writing church music.

Among his life's biggest conflicts was a disagreement with a provincial church over his embellishing of chorale music.

His scandal-less life surely influenced why so little is popularly known about Bach — and explains why all kinds of connotations can be projected onto his music.

"He's kind of a blank in a lot of ways," Brown says. "Most people can't tell you much about Bach" — even those who, in part through films, think of Mozart as a wacky child prodigy and Beethoven as a tormented genius.

Beauty Queen's Disability Claims Bring Lawsuit

FRAUD | The federal government sued a former beauty queen Monday, claiming she fraudulently collected more than $190,000 in Social Security disability benefits, even while she was competing in pageants.

Denise "Dee" Marie Henderson, 43, was crowned Mrs. Minnesota International in 1999 and competed in the Mrs. U.S. International pageant the same year while receiving the benefits.

In both contests she competed in aerobic, evening gown and other events, prosecutors said.

The lawsuit seeks about $600,000, representing damages of three times what Henderson collected from Social Security, plus unspecified civil penalties, interest and costs.

According to the complaint, Henderson falsely claimed she was disabled by a 1995 auto accident that caused headaches and prevented her from sitting for more than 20 minutes, sleeping, reading her daily mail or lifting more than a few pounds. She received Social Security benefits going back to 1996.

Karen Bailey, a spokeswoman for the U.S. attorney's office, would not say whether Henderson was the subject of a criminal case as well. She said Henderson had 20 days to respond to the civil complaint.

Henderson's attorney, Steven Silton, said she is innocent, and that she provided "accurate and full information" to Social Security.

Henderson, who declined to comment, also won the Mrs. Iowa International 2001 pageant, and went on to become a Mrs. International Top 10 finalist. She runs the Miss Teen International pageants in Minnesota and Iowa, according to the complaint.

For the Love of a Bug

In the world of Beetle fans, Herbie rides again ... and again

CLASSIC CARS | When Joe Mikolajczak wants to feel popular, he doesn't fire up a Mustang or Corvette to turn heads. He knows his baby blue 1969 Volkswagen Beetle will do the trick.

"It's neat," he said. "Nobody sees me, but when I get into this car, everyone sees me."

A few years ago, the Beetle's rotted-out engine began to stink up his co-worker's house. Mikolajczak, of Webster, Mass., resurrected it with a few new parts and a dose of old-fashioned scrubbing. "I had it running the next day," he said. "I just loved the car after that."

Beetle owners, young and old, share an unspoken bond in this world, where owners refer to their Beetle by number ("Check out my 62") and wear shirts emblazoned with such slogans as "This Bug's for You." So when the last classic Beetle rolled off the assembly line in Puebla, Mexico, recently, it signaled the end of an era. But it could also mean a resurgence of Beetle collecting and restoring.

The outdated engine of the Mexican-produced Beetles was blamed for contributing to the country's pollution problems and led to its demise in late July. The final batch of 3,000 Beetles will become highly sought collector's items, although it is illegal to bring Beetles into the United States because of safety and pollution regulations.

Volkswagen's German factories stopped making Beetles in 1979. The company's new Beetle was introduced in 1998, though the Mexican plant continued to make the old-style Beetle.

Today, anyone with a few hundred dollars can become a classic Beetle owner. It takes more money than that, however, if the owner wants it in near-perfect condition, says Greg Curello, owner of Rusty Bugs Repair Shop in Hamden, Conn. Curello began repairing and restoring Beetles professionally in 1988. He has restored his own 1971 Beetle seven times, so he understands the lengths to which people will go to salvage what some would call junk. "People just have compassion for the cars and want to keep [them]," Curello said.

Doctors, stock traders and fashion designers bring their Beetles to Curello, who says he's the only strictly Beetle fixer in Connecticut. He keeps the dilapidated cars behind his garage, covered with sheets or up on a loft so he'll have more room to work. Many are full of holes. It could take years to make them show-quality, or even drivable. "It doesn't make sense to fix them," Curello said. "People want them out of sentiment rather than for the car itself."

Any good products out there for repairing minor scrapes on the plastic bumper covers?

Try a very fine rubbing or polishing compound. Ask a body or detailing shop for the brand of polish they use. If this doesn't help, the answer is probably paint.

What's your thinking on the great oil change debate? Owner's manuals often say 4,000 to 5,000 miles; oil change places, logically, say 3,000. And mechanics do too.

I base my recommendations on driving style. If the average commute is 15 miles or more, with an average speed of 45 mph or above and there is no sitting in traffic or at long lights, I think 4,000 to 5,000 miles is perfectly acceptable. Short trips are the killers. Three thousand miles or three months are then mandatory.

What is your opinion on the transmission services where the old fluid is pumped out and replaced with new fluid?

I love them. We have seen amazing results on vehicles where the service is performed on a regular basis. The ideal interval is two years or 24,000 miles. Just be careful that the shop uses the appropriate fluid for your vehicle. One size does not fit all.

Try This At Home

ROAD TEST | Would you spend more than $31,000 on a new car that doesn't have a standard radio or floor mats? Some 600 people already have, according to Subaru. It's the road rally-inspired, 2004 Impreza WRX STi, which has a starting manufacturer's suggested retail price, including destination charge, of $31,545. And it lacks the radio and floor mats to save weight and keep the car as sprightly as possible, said a Subaru spokesman.

Subaru has a long history in rally racing, which is popular overseas and in video games. While rally racing has yet to catch on here the way NASCAR and open-wheel racing has, Subaru officials saw in the STi an opportunity to launch a new halo car for a brand not exactly known for excitement.

One ride in the STi dispels that old notion. The STi's 300-horsepower, 2.5-liter, turbocharged and intercooled, horizontally opposed four-cylinder engine, mated to Subaru's first six-speed manual transmission in the States, can put out an amazing 300 foot-pounds of torque at 4,000 rpm.

Gearing is on the low side, as I regularly needed to upshift quickly out of first gear to keep my speed climbing. There always seemed to be more power available, though.

I never noticed a difference in engine power when I used the standard water spray for the intercooler. It's something rally drivers use to keep things cooled down, but I figure I never pressed the STi as hard as they would. ANN M. JOB (AP)

Originally Sinful ...

Now, tourists visit Las Vegas to lounge, shop and sightsee

TOURISM | Brad Stone walks along the shiny marble floors of the Venetian hotel-casino's new $275 million tower smiling. He brags about the spacious rooms that average $200 a night and the planned upscale restaurant that will draw refined palates and thick wallets.

The executive vice president of the Las Vegas Sands, which owns the Venetian, hardly mentions table games and slot machines. In fact, visitors to the new hotel tower can commit what was once considered a cardinal sin in Sin City — they can check in without ever passing through the casino.

This is the retooled Las Vegas, one in which casinos that rely purely on gamblers to generate the majority of their profits are dwindling. The new business paradigm focuses on hotel rooms, food, beverage and entertainment.

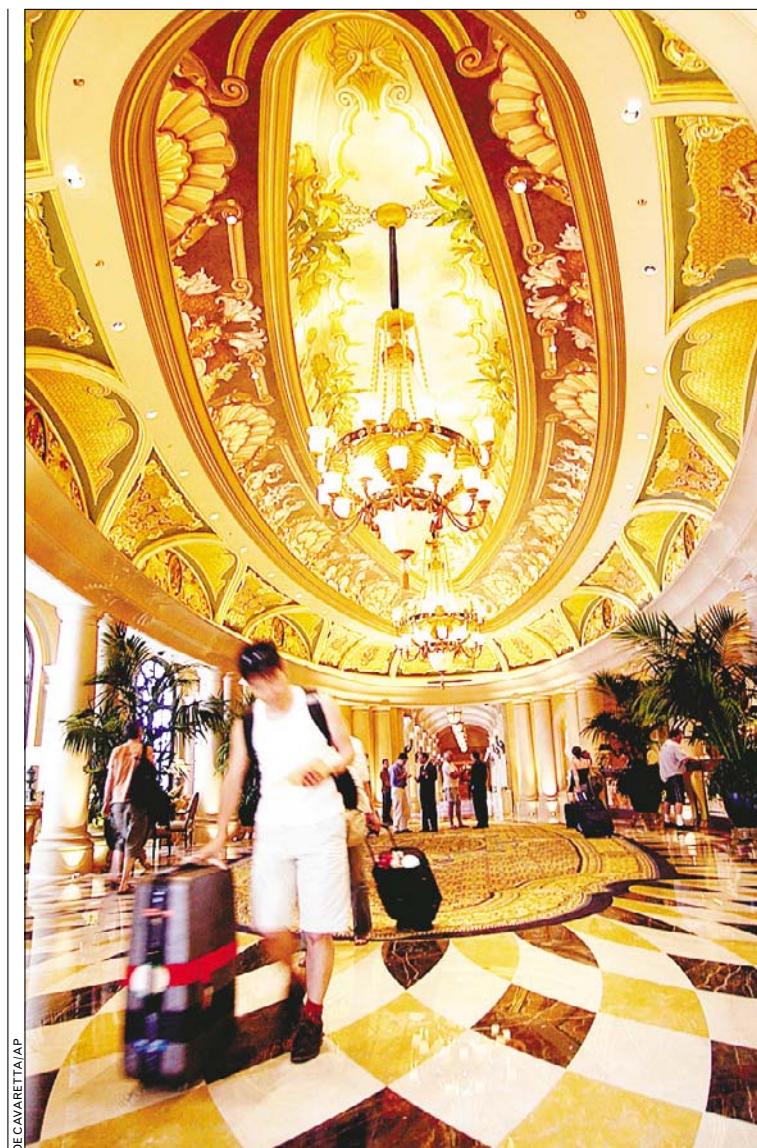

During the past decade revenues for major casino companies have been moving slowly from gambling to nongambling sources, evidence that Las Vegas is evolving into a bona fide tourist destination — a sort of Disneyworld with vices.

The revenue evolution has been gradual but definitive, Nevada Gaming Control Board data shows. In 1992, 61 percent of the revenues generated from casinos in Nevada came from gambling. Last year, that figure was 51.5 percent.

The trend is even more pronounced on the Las Vegas Strip, where last year casinos reported only 43 percent of almost $9 billion in revenue came from gamblers. Ten years ago the figure was 56.7 percent.

The MRC Group Research Institute found in a recent survey that only 17 percent of the visitors surveyed said they intended to gamble. The top activities were sightseeing, pool lounging and shopping.

In addition, Las Vegas is the No. 1 convention city in the country. In 2002, 14.6 percent of the all visitors to Las Vegas were conventioners.

Still, not all the casino giants have embraced the move toward nongambling revenue. Harrah's Entertainment, for one, says it hasn't strayed from its original mission. Spokesman Gary Thompson said 89 percent of his company's revenues last year came from gambling. On any given day during the week, Thompson said, more than half of Harrah's rooms are complimentary, attracting visitors who come to gamble with the lure of a free room.

The Venetian, with its new 1,013-room, 12-story tower, has helped show competitors that the money is in hotel rooms. Other hotels are on the same track.

- The Mandalay Bay hotel-casino is building a $225 million hotel tower with 1,125 rooms that's scheduled to open later this year.
- The Bellagio hotel-casino, which is owned by MGM Mirage, also is expanding, adding a $375 million, 925-room tower slated to open next year.
- Caesars Palace is considering a 1,000-room tower that could cost $350 million.

Where can I find cheap tickets to Chicago for Labor Day weekend?

Your best bet for price is probably avoiding O'Hare and shopping Midway Airport. Southwest often has great fares out of Baltimore, and then rivals compete to match.

We are flying to Frankfurt on United on Thursday. Should checked baggage be locked or unlocked these days? If unlocked, are we going to have an opportunity to lock it after screening?

Unlocked. The Transportation Security Administration will just break the lock off. In some locations, particularly at Reagan, the machines for checked luggage are at the gate, so you have to lock the bag once TSA is done with it. But you can't count on it, so don't pack valuables.

I'm looking for some opinions on Windjammer's Barefoot cruises. Is there an opportunity to learn a little bit about sailing, while letting the crew do the heavy lifting?

You're really along for the ride. At most, you might get a chance to help the crew pull a rope.

Where can I get some information on reasonably priced fall cruises?

Cruises are so cheap this fall, it's simply amazing. It's not uncommon to get deals of $50 per person per day double. You can go directly to the Web sites of the cruise lines or to discounters such as www.vacationstogo.com, www.cruisesonly.com and www.cruise-club.com. Or you can contact your local travel agent, who can do the legwork for you.

Cruises for fall are going cheap — just ask your travel agent (or look online).

TO THE EDITOR

IN TUESDAY'S Personal Tech section, Rob Pegoraro advised users to leave their computers on to avoid a lengthy boot-up process. He is correct that a PC's sleep feature, if enabled, uses less electricity than a computer in active mode, but he is misinterpreting the purpose of this sleep feature. A large number of PCs on the market use power management per federal guidelines, where a qualified system uses 70 percent less electricity in sleep mode than computers without power management features. But this feature should not be used as a replacement for occasionally turning a computer off. Keep in mind that carbon is being fed into the atmosphere for every hour a computer is drawing electricity.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — What you accomplish may be remembered for some time — not only because you did it, but because it will prove a valuable service.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — You are certainly riding the crest of a high-energy wave, and nothing can put you down save a good dose of self-deception. Avoid it.

VIOLENCE AGAINST TRANSGENDERERS

Live Online

From washingtonpost.com/liveonline

EARLINE BUDD, a transgender (male to female), activist and program manager for Transgender Support Services at Us Helping Us, a community-based AIDS service organization, was online Tuesday to discuss recent crime against transgenders and what can be done about it.

Why do you think transgenders are targets of crime?

We are targets in that we live opposite our birth sex and that is also based on society's views on what is normal. Concerning the recent attacks and murders, we feel very much that these are possibly isolated incidents. But they still can be considered hate crimes because they are specific attacks on transgender individuals.

Does "transgender" refer to people who are pre-operative and post-operative? How is "transgender" different from "transsexual"?

In a very quick response, yes, transgender does encompass pre-op, post-op and transsexual because it is an umbrella term that includes an array of different communities.

However, while this is basic terminology that is given to us by some states (California — and specifically San Francisco), many transsexuals, inter-sexed individuals, pre-ops, post-ops do not identify with this term.

Do you feel that the crimes directed at transgendered individuals are any different from those directed at racial minorities? (For example, a white supremacist who doesn't like Latinos or blacks and attacks them).

I do agree that in terms of the result of these assaults and the murders that they are the equivalent of crimes of racial and ethnic prejudice. The assaults and the murders could be equated to the same level of crimes committed against individuals on the basis of race and ethnicity.

Regis and Kelly get along famously.

TELEVISION

Nothing But Love

KELLY RIPA says she's tired of the rumors that she and her "Live With Regis and Kelly" co-host REGIS PHILBIN don't get along. "There are two men in my life I've never fought with. One is my husband, the other is my co-host," Ripa told Lifetime magazine. "Every day before we go on the air, we tell each other, 'I'm really glad I'm here.'" The 32-year-old also said she never wanted to compare herself to her predecessor, Kathie Lee Gifford, who sat next to Philbin on the morning talk show for 15 years. Ripa took over the job in February 2001. (AP)

SPORTS

Sage Advice

Former boxing champion MIKE TYSON, who served three years in prison on a rape conviction, says he empathizes with basketball star Kobe Bryant, the Los Angeles Lakers guard who is facing sexual assault charges. Tyson said he wished Bryant "the best" and urged the NBA star to stay close to his family, because Bryant will need them to visit him if he ends up in jail. (EXPRESS)

LAW

Bobby in Jail Until Court

Singer BOBBY BROWN will stay in jail until a court appearance Wednesday, officials said. Brown has been in a Georgia jail since being arrested on Friday for violating his probation from an earlier drunk driving conviction. A warrant was issued last month, but he was not arrested until Friday night, when he was spotted at a suburban Atlanta restaurant with wife Whitney Houston. The singer was arrested because he did not show up for court-ordered community service, drug treatment or a random drug test. (AP)

LAW

Patron Sues Puffy

A Queens woman filed a lawsuit against SEAN "P. DIDDY" COMBS for $5 million, claiming a bouncer at his Manhattan restaurant, Justin's, threw her to the ground and dragged her on the pavement. Stephanie Grieson, 35, said she was arguing with a friend when the bouncer grabbed her by the neck and dragged her down the sidewalk, The New York Post reported Tuesday. Grieson was left with wounds on her legs. (AP)

MUSIC

Keith Tops Country Nods

TOBY KEITH received six nominations for Country Music Association Awards on Tuesday, with Johnny Cash picking up four, two involving his rendition of a song by rock act Nine Inch Nails. Keith led all nominees, with nods for best entertainer, male vocalist, and album of the year for "Unleashed." "Beer for My Horses," a collaboration with Willie Nelson, was nominated for best song, single, music video and vocal event. (AP)
